Do Well Better Client Portraits

Long-Form Film Transcripts

Jamshed

Jamshed: I think everybody needs some avenue where they can have an impact on somebody else.

A lot of successful people think they were successful because of their own doing, but in my opinion, not everything comes from your brains or your hard work or your talent.

You get help from other people.

My mother was a doctor. She came from a very poor background. Went through medical school and practiced medicine for a number of years. She really came up from very little and a lot of the clients we see at Suited for Change are in that position. And all they need is that...that initial hand for them to get going.

The main mission is to provide them with clothing for job interviews, but we realize that the suit is only part of what we do.

The other intangible things that we provide, that's really what is the most valuable.

And they feel so empowered, they feel like, you know, 'I can do this, I can get this job!'

I never thought that I would reach this point where I could help people.

I'm fortunate to be where I am now, but it's not like I had this master plan, you know, all along. BNY Mellon helped me build that.

My passion is really to give back.

You know, you see somebody whose life has changed, they can start the journey up the ladder.

The impact is real, and that's impressive, I think.
